

Christian is working on a replacement for the refrigerator in the office which gave up the ghost a few weeks back. Her very clever idea of procuring a refurbished unit from a reliable source she knows of is in play, with the now pair of dead fridges being hauled away with the delivery of the new unit.

It is the committee's understanding that a shower valve in the ladies locker room was repaired/replaced by MMG earlier in the season.

Accepting the adage "no news is good news" we've not had any negative feedback on the change of schedule and restoration of Tuesday hours. As the season progresses the hours are cut back to reflect the waning sunlight so we may then hear some grumbling at that point but nothing fatal we presume.

Before the season began we had no one volunteer to act as an event chairman to create and run any single special event during season, hence no special events. We fully believe the pool could be managed into a dynamic faction of our community but only by a dynamic person(s) who has the ability to run the pool like a full time job; candidates are most welcome!

Anchor Aquatics appears to be struggling this season with the unexpected death of its owner director the week before the season's opening date. The onsite management supervision, normally constant, has been sporadic thus far. Several requests from the committee to complete the new underwater lighting project have gone unanswered. While we've been assigned a terrific new lifeguard in Yana, this season may have to be accepted as an off year for our contractor, with a final assessment of their performance after the season has ended.
